This project was a great way for me to go back to assessing myself. I've been doing a fair amount of group work in the class and I've actually only done this assignment and one other one by myself. It's always good to be able to assess yourself. I was able to find that I work very well when I'm being taught something and actually applying it. By having a follow along assignment, I was able to learn and notice quite a bit more than what it has been with just doing it on our own. Sometimes when working on my own without a second opinion, it can be difficult for me to write things correctly. I've been able to develop a better understanding for the things we discussed and the new concepts we learned. While projects in classes are good for learning about the material in the class, it's also good to work on them whether it be by yourself or with someone, and assess what you or others can do better. After assessing, think of ways you can do better the next time and give constructive criticism to others.
